Olanike Ojelabi is a current public policy doctoral student at the University of Massachusetts Boston. Her research interests include health policies, immigration, and nonprofits. She works with both quantitative and qualitative methods. Prior to joining UMass Boston, Ojelabi was a research assistant in the Urban Studies Department of Worcester State University, where she was exposed to studies intended for policy change in the Greater Worcester area. Ojelabi also worked at different local nonprofit organizations in Worcester, where she advocated and connected youths and families to community resources. She currently serves on the University of Massachusetts Boston’s Student Advisory Board.
